HONGRONG, SEPTEMBER GTH, 1870,

THE article upon the Massacro at Tientsin, extracted elsowhere from the Globe, though the main sound in judgment, unfortunately reiterates certain orrors which are much calculated to mislead the public at home as to the true bearing of the Green in the question. In the first place, the storius of the French Missionaries in the interior between the first place, the storius of the French Missionaries in the interior of the Missionaries; and it is not difficult to way. that detailed comments were made in this paper upon this particular point, and it is not, therefore, accessary to enter upon it ugain at length. The interference on the part of !. the Catholic Priests has been grossly exagsome excuso for their own conduct, and it appears from undoubted authority, as a rule, to amount to nothing more than their using their endeavours to prevent their converts being persecuted, as they are surely warranted in doing, no less by common justice than by the express stipulations in the Treaty that the teaching of the Christian religion will be allowed throughout the Empire. Mission? aries, both Catholic and Protestant, do not interfere more with the Chinese officials more than any other foreigners in China are compelled to interfere. Our presence in F country where we cannot rely upon justice from the authorities, is of necessity an interference. What greater "interference" can there be than the exterritoriality jurisdiction, and yet no one will maintain that this is not an absolute necessity. In country so misgoverned as China, everything interferes with the authorities; or, perhaps, more accurately speaking, the authorities terfore with everything. If, for example we consider the terrible tortures to which the luckless native Christians were subjected at Tientsin, simply because they were Christjans, and the cruelties inflicted not long ago upon the shroffs of a foreign merchant at Chinkiang, who wished to carry goods into the interior in accordance with the privileges agreed to in the Tientsin Treaty, we shall one case, the Catholic Religion, and in the other case, foreign trade, was interfering with the native authorities - the fact being clear that the latter endeavoured to make use

It is to be regretted that this mistaken view has been given forth in a home paper, as it is calculated to injure the reputations of a class of men whose benevolence and noble Christian devotion in the dark on the subject. However the case, and noticed the pocket book on the better settle this matter himself, seeing be hus should command the respect even of those who may differ with them on points of dogma. The reason why the Chinese masses were ready to believe the calumnies put about by the Mandarins, is to be found in a totally different direction to any conduct of the Missionaries. Although it is well known to those who have devoted attention to the subject, it is very generally overlooked that Rutherford-Alcock's Convention, they neverall the secret political and other like Societies | theless maintain that it would be productive in China give themselves out as the propogators of a special religion. The man daring in the present justance were probably not unnetwated by a suspicion of a design on the part of the Catholics to obtain political power; but the idea resulted from abuses among the Chinese, not as is too generally believed, from indiscreet conduct on the part of the Missionaries. This suspicion doubtless made them sendy to assist in the propagation of the calumnas against the Priests and Sisters of Charity and the familiarity of the Chinese with the desperate objects which, among their own people, are found to underlie the professions of Societies pretending to propagata religious systems, made the masses ready to believe any tories that might be put about Influenced would ideas, it is that to see how eager! the slightest action on the part of a Catholic Missionary, that might be twisted into an appearance of interfering with the authorities would be snapped up as a grievance by the officials; and, on the other hand, it is equally easy to understand how untertipulous Chinese would avail themselves of the facility, with which the officials are

Extracts. Consequences of Abandoning One Colonies. Let us ontegorially and concisely at forth the probable consequences of the abandonment by Great Britain of her colonics. They may be stated thus :- Curtailment of trade, an an betought loss of employment for the sollers of the pation. Diminution of supplies of raw staples for manufacture. Shutting up of safe scourities for the profitable investment of superfluous wealth and redundant capital. Loss of suitable fields for on going enterprise and languishing industry. Diminution of the pooutgoing emigrant a subject of the Crown and a civisan of the State would borlost. Deprive tion of ports of refuse in once of war. Now, all the world may be said to be open to British ntuisers. Without her colonies England might find her shipe shelteries on the high some. Loss of pational prestigo. England is now reaperted by other nations because ber ships aweep every ara; becames her flag floats over free communities in every zone; because underberling men of all nationalities and colours enjoy equal rights and thate a common citizonship; cause her race and language, more than any other, pervade the world. Loss of nationality by all outgriph English people. Men com pelled to enigrate by the presente of circumstunces, the want of employment or the lack of opportunity in this overgrowded island, if they wish to exercise any right of citizenship, must enabled them (i.e. British troops) to discharge made of their duties in a manner whileb they could not have done if they had been simply trained in garrison towns at home. Our troops were distributed throughout the world in such a memper se to enable a force to be ut ones collocted at any threatened point." Lose of openings where the youth of England can find ample scope for their business to the presence of which invaluable resinoids and not exceedaptitudes, 'accial' aspirations, or political ambition. The encrifice of lands, which the in a great measure he ascribed. It is necessary; "unemployed" have styled the "national however, that the sick should always remember others like them may help to better their blood, condition. Transference of what now consti tures the strongth and the glory of this country to independent or rival powers. Should America, Prussia, or any other riging Power take a belpless but abandoned colony under its protection England's loss will be the other nation's gain. The marrowing and debasement of national aspirations; the recognition of a low standard of patriotism; the measuring of State doties by a muney-test; the encrifice of national honour and good faith to a false and fatal economy. And, finally, ne regards the colonies themselves, the imposition on them of distasteful and burdenaune responsibilities; the infliction on them which their political destinies are shaped and influenced; the expositre of some of them to bloody outbreaks and zervile disturbances; and the implanting amon at them of subittered and heavile feelings towards the land of their fathers. Surely this is an array of evils dire enough to deter any reasonable Government from a policy, which might entail such a heritage of disuster. Nor do we think that when once the statesmen and people of this country come fairly to look upon the question in all its aspects; and to comprehend more clearly its practical issues, they will fail any longer to see that it will be far, for better to reconstruct and consolidate than to dismember and disown the empire which is the outcome of so many sacrifices and the theme of so much laudation.
